THRIVE BY FIVE WASHINGTON WELCOMES THREE NEW MEMBERS TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS

SEATTLE – At its January meeting, the Thrive by Five Washington Board of Directors welcomed three new members. Thrive is the state's non-profit public-private partnership for early learning.

Named to the board were state Sen. Rosemary McAuliffe, chair of the Early Learning & K-12 Education Committee; Anson Fatland, senior program officer at The Paul G. Allen Family Foundation; and Laura Peterson, vice-president of State and Local Government Operations for The Boeing Company.

Key work for Thrive includes:

- working closely with the state Department of Early Learning and Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction to lead the creation of a statewide early learning system that supports children from birth to third grade. (The three organizations led the creation of the new statewide Early Learning Plan that was released in September 2010.);
- overseeing the state's new Home Visiting Services Account, created by the Legislature to match public and private dollars to fund proven and promising home visiting programs throughout the state; and
- launching a campaign to help parents better understand why the first years of life are so important and how they can best support their children.

The Thrive by Five Washington Board of Directors currently has 23 members, including four legislators representing both parties and both houses of the Legislature, and three ex-officio members: the governor, state superintendent of public instruction and director of the state Department of Early Learning. Members serve three-year terms.

McAuliffe, Fatland and Peterson join an active and committed board of state, community, business and philanthropic leaders, many of whom helped create Thrive almost five years ago. The board is currently co-chaired by Gov. Christine Gregoire and Jackie Bezos of the Bezos Family Foundation. Nina Auerbach is president & CEO of Thrive by Five Washington.
